

Office

Many years ago when hand written letters were the norm rather than the exception, nobody would dream of using white paper. Writing pads were always made from a pastel coloured paper with a nice quality feel to it. Every letter was unique, handwriting differed from person to person, people used different pens, different coloured ink, the paper changed - overall every letter had its own identity, its own feel and was a pleasure to receive.

With the advent of home computers and laser and inkjet printing, letters and CV's have lost something. The majority are on inferior white copier paper, people use the same font, they all look the same.

A special paper is a way of bringing back some individuality. A special paper makes it look like you care, it tells people you are an individual, and it shows that you have given just that extra bit of thought to what you present to them.

First impressions count - you only have one chance to make a first impression - give yourself the best chance.

We hope you like the Office range and understand the benefits of making it your new choice for home computer use.

The Office range is a unique collection of colour and texture that performs with today's technology but introduces a quality look and feel which together with the matching envelopes really does make all the difference.

* Acid Free

Originally, the only letters carried were those to and from the Monarch and the Royal Court. In 1635 a Royal Proclamation extending the use of the "Royal Mail" to the public was issued by Charles I.

Mixed Pack

